SOURCE EVALUATIONS ARE DEFINITIVE. APPRAISAL OF CONTENT IS TENTATIVE.

1. [redacted] an unknown number of air raid sirens installed on buildings of the 41st Armored Artillery Regiment at Czarna (Hammerstein) and on several buildings in Warsaw. [redacted] air raid sirens were installed on high wooden towers near all military installations and particularly at industrial plants in Zabrze (Hindenburg) and Labedy. [redacted]
2. On one occasion at a 41st Armored Artillery Regiment officers' call the regimental political deputy remarked that evacuation plans for the civilian population called for the evacuation of non-essential persons from all threatened cities and vital industrial areas to wooded areas outside the cities' limits. [redacted] the evacuation movement of officers' families, which would presumably be a part of the larger overall evacuation, would probably be the most disorganized movement ever made. The method of transportation was never mentioned. [redacted] some form of evacuation plans existed concerning the urban civilian population. [redacted]
3. [redacted] in the event of an air attack, each garrison commander would supposedly assume the following additional responsibilities: evacuating the civilian population, controlling all vehicular traffic and available transportation, maintaining law and order, utilizing as many civilians as deemed appropriate to effect evacuation, and performing any other task necessary to safeguard government property, buildings, and the civilian population. The militia (MO) would become subordinate to and directed by the garrison commander.
4. [redacted]
